SOKOL November/December 2013 vol. 36 no. 10
This November/December issue of Slavo is the last of 2013. It’s my remaining chance to write about the flurry of holidays that end our year. This two-month season brings us a big mixture of religious, national, and Czech celebrations.

Going back into my memories of the 1940s, the season actually started with Halloween. It was not the big trick-or-treat event it became when my children were young. Czech farm kids went to small parties, usually sponsored by church or fraternal groups. It was the townies who went for treats and tipped over outhouses as tricks. Yes, dear reader, there were still some outhouses in the 40s. Mother did not approve of the “wild” part of Halloween and made sure we also went to church to pray for the dead.

Thanksgiving was, and still is, a favorite holiday for me. I recall enormous meals at my Trnka grandparents where Grandpa Tom insisted on Grandma Catherine cooking more food than we could possibly eat. No one was to be hungry. I look forward to the feast at my niece Diane’s again this year. It is the biggest family event of our year.

In early December we have a number of saints’ days that still generate a little celebration. St. Lucia is honored in some Swedish communities. St. Barbara is known to bring a small toy to Slavic children, and St. Nicholas is remembered in various ways. In Czech farm country, St. Nicholas not only knew if you were naughty or nice, he came to check if the records were correct. This Saint was not the jolly old elf we sing about today. He was a tall and usually stern bishop in full regalia of miter and robes. He was Svatý Mikuláš!

My memory of a visit to our farm by an elaborate “Mikuláš” group is still very sharp. On that December 6, snow covered the ground. The group of six, all dressed in appropriate costumes, arrived in a sleigh pulled by a team of two horses and lit by kerosene lanterns. Two teamsters, dressed in big sheepskin coats and hats drove the team. Also in the sleigh were the three main characters: Svatý Mikuláš dressed in bishop’s robes and carrying his staff; an Angel in white robes carrying a record book; and disguised in red and black, a Devil with whip and chains. A peddler completed the cast. The Saint, along with the Angel and Devil, entered the house where he required us to account for our behavior in the past year and demonstrate that we knew our prayers. Our parents had the chance to put in a good word for us or point out some flaws that needed work. The Angel recorded all good deeds in his book while the Devil pleaded to be allowed to whip those who misbehaved. The Saint encouraged us to do better and gave us a small gift of candy.

Out by the sleigh Dad had a drink with the drivers and paid the peddler a few dollars for an enormous pair of women’s underpants, said to be a Christmas gift for Mother, that never made it into the house. It was a clever means of collecting payment for the performance without breaking character. The crew got back in the sleigh and went off to the next farm, where the performance was repeated and the underpants were sold again.

This year our Sokol Holiday Dinner returns to the C.S.P.S. Hall on Sunday, December 8. As I recall, a snowstorm kept me from last year’s party. I can’t promise good weather, but I can assure you we are planning for a festive afternoon with good food and fellowship. I encourage you to attend. Reservations are required by December 1. Call 651-290-0542. Nazdar!

After one returned issue, we will hold all future issues until you notify us.

We pay 46¢ for each returned issue. Email us: <slovo@sokolmn.org>, phone us: 651-290-0542, or write us: Czech and Slovak Sokol Minnesota, 383 Michigan Street, Saint Paul, MN 55102. Thank you!
Meet Our Gymnastics Instructors
By Mary Cahill, Women’s Physical Director

Gymnastics classes are underway and our skilled and enthusiastic staff has a great year planned for the gymnasts. Returning as lead instructor is Alisa Hollibush, who has been with Sokol Minnesota for many years, originally as a youth gymnast, and now as an instructor for over 10 years. She has trained with and taught at Circus Juventas and is a graduate of an American Sokol Instructor course. Alisa recently completed certification in Child Development and is continuing her education to pursue teaching licensure. Madeline Moser returns for her third year as an instructor; Jayne Pobanz for her second year. Both have been a part of Sokol Minnesota as youth gymnasts and attended American Sokol Instructors courses. Madeline, a junior at Highland Park High School, competes in high school diving as well as gymnastics. Jayne, a sophomore at Central High School, is a competitive high school volleyball player. Jason Brozovich is back for his second year, where he is working to re-establish our boys’ gymnastics program and has six devoted boys enrolled. Jason is a former Division 1 gymnast. He is an active Sokol Minnesota member and Saint Paul Czech and Slovak Folk Dancer. Alice O’Brien, Siri Schroeder, and Erica Meyers are longtime Sokol Minnesota gymnasts and competitors who have begun their first year as instructors. Alice and Siri are freshman at Central High School; Erica is a freshman at Highland Park High School. All three have had Sokol instructor training. Siri was an assistant last year with the tots class. Erica is a high school cross country runner and already this fall has had impressive time results in meets.

Back with us for her fourth year of instructing is Courtney Benson. Courtney is a senior at Hamline University with a double major in Finance and Economics. She is a four-year member of the Hamline gymnastics team. She is a three-time national all-around qualifier, ultimately receiving a national championship title. Additionally, she has been named to the All-American National Team for floor, beam, and vault. Courtney has practiced gymnastics for 15 years, has coached in her home town of Winona, Minnesota, for six years, and has been with Spirit Gymnastics at Hamline University for four years.

Joining the instructor team this year is Summer Haag, a junior at Hamline University, majoring in biology and plans to be a veterinarian. She is a three-year member of Hamline University’s gymnastics team, recently named co-captain. She is also an accomplished gymnast, receiving awards such as hardest worker. Summer has practiced gymnastics for 16 years and has coached for several years in her hometown of Rochester, Minnesota.

You are invited to stop by to observe a class on Monday or Tuesday evening to see Sokol instructors and gymnasts in action.

Western District Annual Meeting
By Mary Cahill

Sokol Minnesota members Joyce Tesarek, Norm Petrik, and Mary Cahill met with representatives from other Western District Sokol Units (Cedar Rapids, Omaha, South Omaha, Sokolice Crete) at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, on Saturday, September 21, to discuss Sokol activities involving both the Western District and American Sokol.

At the Board of Instructors (BOI) meeting, topics included reflections on the 2013 Western District competition hosted by Sokol Omaha and the 2013 American Sokol Sports Festival at Milwaukee, preparations for the 2014 Western District Competition at Sokolice Crete on April 11 and 12, 2014, and the election of BOI officers. Theresa Vernon, Sokolice Crete, was re-elected as Western District Men’s and Women’s Physical Director.

After the BOI concluded its business, the general Western District meeting was convened. Other delegates joined the BOI representatives, and the main topics of discussion shifted to matters involving American Sokol (AS). The AS National Conference will be in St. Louis, Missouri, on April 24–27, 2014. Information about the conference has been sent to Unit Presidents. Units are to send suggested changes to AS bylaws to AS by November 30. Proposed bylaw changes and finance information will be sent to Units one month prior to the Convention. Western District President Allison Gerber will send names of members from each Sokol Unit as participants on temporary committees that will begin work soon on matters to be discussed and decided at the Convention. The number of delegates from each Sokol Unit to the Convention is based on membership count at an identified point in time, and submission of those delegates’ names to AS is to occur by the end of this calendar year. Joyce Tesarek will represent Sokol Minnesota and the Western District on the AS Membership Committee in its preparations for the AS Convention. Sokol Minnesota’s nominating committee will identify candidates for delegates to the AS Convention; Sokol Minnesota will vote on these candidates as well as on our Unit’s Board of Directors at our annual meeting on November 22.

American Sokol President Tom Pajer listened attentively at our business meeting, responded to questions, and gave a short presentation on his vision of American Sokol moving into the future. He updated us on the new AS Operations Advisor position, now staffed by long time Sokol member Mary Cushing. The Advisor will develop standards for a model Sokol Unit. Ms. Cushing will visit all Sokol Units in the United States; Sokol Minnesota anticipates her visit on November 5 or 6. The Operations Advisor will provide reasonable assistance to Units to help implement new program ideas and increase Unit membership. We ended the day enjoying a delicious BBQ fundraising dinner that Sokol Cedar Rapids held, spending time with Western District meeting attendees, and saying hello to long-time Sokol Cedar Rapids members who helped with the dinner.
September 19, 2013, Board of Directors (BOD) Meeting  By Cindy Coulter, Recording Secretary

For three years Attorney Jennifer Urban has worked on property tax relief for Sokol Minnesota. The Minnesota Department of Revenue Review Board recently determined that Sokol Minnesota will receive a reduction in its property taxes because it qualifies as a purely public charitable institution. Consequently, Sokol Minnesota gains a 2013 tax exemption (payable in 2014) on the building portions used for our mission (58%) while the portions used for The Glockenspiel Restaurant (48%) remains taxable.

Sokol Minnesota’s Partners in Preservation (PIP) grant deadline was re-extended from August 31 to November 1 for Phase I completion of the air conditioning installation. Second floor air conditioning installation is underway with roof strengthening rods and wood rafters on order and the quieter rooftop unit design completed. James Steel Construction awaits building permit approval from the Saint Paul Historical group. Funding is still needed to complete the rooftop air conditioning installation. Sokol Minnesota will submit a final report to PIP on November 30.

The Board of Trustees is working diligently to replace the fire escape on C.S.P.S. building’s north end. The goal is to complete the work “by the time the snow flies.” A unique window on C.S.P.S. Hall’s third floor unfortunately suffered glass breakage; Miller-Dunwiddie Architectural Firm is assisting Sokol Minnesota to find a replacement window.

Miller-Dunwiddie drafted a comprehensive market analysis report that takes into consideration inputs by the Sokol Minnesota community, recognizes urgent maintenance issues (e.g. parapet and chimney caps, tuck-pointing on original brick walls), and recommends future improvements based on financial availability. Miller-Dunwiddie strongly believes that the Hall is a desirable facility for event rentals and recommends that Sokol Minnesota consider increasing the event rental rate. The BOD approved an increase for 2014 Hall event rentals.

Many Minnesota Sokol members generously sent contributions to aid the relief effort in West, Texas. (See June/July 2013 issue, page 1, for our original story). Slovo recently received this update from Mary Beth Dulok.

Update on Sokol West Gym and Hall

Since the explosion on April 17, 2013, both of the Sokol buildings have been demolished. With the help of another nonprofit organization, the demolition was paid for. This helped us out greatly (financially). They also paid for the clean up and haul off. We are in the process of working on a set of plans for the gym and hall. There are a lot of decisions that need to be made.

As for our gymnastic classes, we continued to practice at a local covered pavilion. This has been a challenge, but we have made it work. Some local SPJST lodges donated a flex floor for us to use to tumble on. We participated in Slet which was held by Sokol KHB – Ennis. Ennis volunteered to host Slet since we were not able to use our facilities. West was supposed to host Slet this year. We have also performed at our annual Westfest festival, which was held Labor Day weekend. We also sold funnel cakes, fries, and tea at our booth to help with our rebuilding.

We started back up with gymnastics on September 11. We are still at the local covered pavilion until a building becomes available. We hope this comes soon.

It will be a long process but we will make it. Thank you to all who have donated. We greatly appreciate it. Nazdar!

Thank you, Mary Beth Dulok, Secretary Sokol West

A gaming consultant is working with the Gaming Committee to improve its records. We now have three new gaming ticket-selling employees, with a potential to hire one or two more.

Gymnastic classes began on September 9. Engineering reported that the damaged bars could be made safe for use one more year. Western District’s Annual Meeting is scheduled for September 21 at Sokol Cedar Rapids, which will be an opportunity to sort out gymnastic events and clinics. American Sokol President Tom Pajer will be in attendance, as well as Sokol Minnesota representatives Mary Cahill, Norm Petrik, and Joyce Tesarek.

The Kitchen Committee will post a wish list in Slovo of kitchen items that would enhance Hall rentals. The BOD was lucky to sample delicious homemade plum butter, povídla, which was made to be sold as a fundraiser for Sokol Minnesota. Czech language classes have begun; interest in Slovak language classes also has been noted. Other 2013 classes scheduled are: October 19 strudel-baking class, December 5 ornament craft class, and December 21 holiday cookie baking. Several educational classes for 2014 are under consideration including: bobbin lace, weaving, tatting, apron painting, embroidery, koláče, and zelníčky.

Festival of Nations (FON) director Steve Heckler has a new position at the Union Depot in Saint Paul. Sokol Minnesota has enjoyed working with Steve; we hope to stay in touch with him. We also look forward to working with FON’s new director Linda DeRoode in the near future.

Sokol Minnesota’s online calendar is an excellent communication tool informing members of Hall availability and upcoming events. If members would like to schedule or update an online calendar posting, please contact master calendar scheduler Pam Kotval at <pakotval@msn.com> or 952-944-0745 so she can keep our online calendar up-to-date and keep us on track! Thank you!

A Last Dance was held to say goodbye to Bohemian Hall in Ford Dodge, Iowa, on August 10, at the Fort Dodge Eagles Ballroom. When the Hall burned down on August 3, 2012, the historic center of the local Czech community was lost. Many at the dance shared their memories of growing up at the Hall, their weddings there, and, of course, the many dances when the community gathered. The remains of the building have been bulldozed, but the Hall and all it meant are still remembered. Information: Fort Dodge Messenger, August 22, 2013. 2013 Czech-Slovak Festival: A Great Success!
By Jyni Koschak with help from Joyce Tesarek, Louise Wessinger, and M.L. Kucera

The 24th annual Czech and Slovak Festival, held September 15 at the International Institute of Minnesota in Saint Paul, was pronounced a “great success” by Festival Chair Joyce Tesarek. “We had good weather, excellent entertainment, great crowds, cold Czech beer, and delicious food.”

As we have each year since 1989, Sokol members and friends worked together to create an ethnic-themed afternoon for the entire family, featuring traditional food, vendors, and a variety of entertainment. The result, besides good fellowship and an enjoyable event, was a profit of $4,731.

The Czech and Slovak Festival involved months of advance planning and preparation; days cooking and baking often in temperatures over 90°; hours loading, hauling, and on-site set up (not to mention speedy, expert tear-down and clean up), all accomplished by volunteers. “I want to thank every one of the committee chairs and their helpers, plus the program, entertainment, and activities folks for making this Festival possible,” said Tesarek.

Why Support Sokol Minnesota By Joyce Tesarek, Fundraising Chair

As you plan for your year-end charitable giving, please consider a donation to Sokol Minnesota. We’ve written much about our 125th anniversary Legacy Campaign and the reasons to support the C.S.P.S. Hall renovation. Your contributions to the building fund have been generous. But we also have funding needs for Sokol Minnesota as an organization. Operating expenses for running the building, printing and mailing Slovo newsletter, and running all our programming were $125,802 in 2012. Our utilities alone run over $1,200 a month. We count on generous year-end contributions to help with these expenses.

Why should you support Sokol Minnesota and make sure this organization continues to be available to us all?

● For 126 years, Sokol has been the place to learn about and experience Czech and Slovak culture and traditions through classes, concerts, lectures, and ethnic dinners.

● Sokol has youth gymnastics classes and dance groups for all ages (youth, teen, and adult). All classes focus on having fun, personal satisfaction, and growth, not only on competing and winning.

● Sokol provides opportunities to be a leader; plan an event, join a committee, serve on the Board of Directors or Board of Trustees. New ideas are welcome!

● Chance to meet visiting guests, artists, and dignitaries from the Slovak and Czech Republics. Sokol hosted Czech Ambassador Petr Gandalovič in July.

● There are lots of ways to get involved and learn new things: bake koláče, set up for an event, be a server at a dinner, join a hall cleanup day, prune trees, help with the website or newsletter, volunteer in the office. Everyone’s talents are welcome!

● Sokol maintains our historic Hall as a West 7th landmark; it is a meeting place for events and to share with the community.

● The best thing about Sokol Minnesota is the great people you meet, the friends you make, and the community. We had over 100 volunteers organizing, preparing, setting up, and running our 2013 Czech and Slovak Festival in September. We all volunteered because it was fun! All donations to Sokol are tax-deductible.

Donate using the form or contribute online at our website <www.sokolmn.org>. We also accept stock transfers and have information on including Sokol Minnesota as a legacy recipient in your will. Contact Joyce at 612-822-6147 with any questions.

The Prague Story Today
By Vanda Kašová, Columnist from Prague

A skull covered on canvas, lying on a red and gold pillow, is decorated with a crown with huge blue stones. Around it stands a group of men in red and white robes: the Catholic priests. The scene is solemn and silent. The ceremony is watched by thousands of people, many of them dressed up in suits. It is not a view from the Middle Ages. This is what one would have seen on the last weekend of September in Stará Boleslav, a small city close to Prague. The skull used to be placed on the neck of Czech national patron Prince Václav. It was a festive day that commemorates one of the most important persons in Czech history.

A first-time participant might be surprised. Even more, if he knew that the Czechs are among the most atheistic people of the world and, what’s more, they are proud about it. At least they say so. But more and more they look for spirituality in their lives these days; Czechs are looking back to their history and traditions in search for the deeper sense of life.

But the skull celebrated in the street is not the only thing that would surprise tourists. They would be surprised when they went to a restaurant to eat a Saturday lunch. What would surprise them would be the price. One 11% beer for $2, a meal for $7. Eating out is very cheap in Czech Republic. Maybe that is why people under 30 cannot (usually) cook, but also why cooking has become a passion for middle-class youth as something exotic and cool.

And the trip would continue with more surprises. It was only a few weeks ago when I guided the editor of this newsletter, Marit, in Prague. Every now and then we stopped to take a picture. Of what was she taking pictures? Pavement and doors! Doors, at least in the old parts of Czech cities, are often masterpieces of art with sculptured flowers and animals. The pavements are not one piece of asphalt as in the U.S.A. They are made from black and white cobbles set in geometric shapes.

I had never thought about how beautiful the streets and sidewalks are until I walked on them with Marit. And this is what surprised me in Prague. It can surprise even those who have walked her pavements for dozens of years.
Christmas in Bohemia 100 years ago... from John and Joe Gindele’s award-winning memoir

Yorkville Twins: Hilarious Adventures Growing Up In New York City, 1944–1962

Here is another excerpt from the memoir of twin brothers (and new Sokol Minnesota members) Joseph and John Gindele, who grew up on the rough streets of Yorkville on Manhattan’s ethnic Upper East Side over 60 years ago. This is their story: what the city was like then, how it changed, and how two kids from immigrant parents became Robbinsdale, Minnesota, school teachers. This humorous, endearing collection of stories involves immigrants, survival, growing up, coming of age, and learning what it is to be an American. Even though this is not a Minnesota story, it is similar to that of many immigrants here in Minnesota, and well worth reading.
The book was 2012 Midwest Book Awards Finalist, coming in second in the Social Science category.

The Gindele family always had a Christmas tree in our Manhattan brownstone apartment, sometimes two. We purchased the trees by Thanksgiving. We hung chocolate ornaments on some of its branches. Sometimes during the night, mice found the low floor, mice found the low hanging ones and chewed on Santa’s feet. Much of the tree would fall off if it were dragged down the five flights of stairs of our 420 apartment building. Who would want to sweep all of that up? Joe was the designated sentry who went down to the street, directing away pedestrian traffic. When the all-clear signal was given, John shoved the tree out of our fifth-story front room window; watching and hearing it crash to the ground. (It was lucky that the rickety window itself did not grab onto the tree and join it in its descent.) When the tree landed, most of the needles immediately fell off the branches.

A week or two after Christmas, the neighborhood kids gathered up all the dried, discarded trees and dragged them near a fire hydrant, since cars were not allowed to park there. The trees were set ablaze. A roaring rapid thunderbolt was heard as flames violently and quickly shot up over 20 feet high. Occasionally, people got concerned that the gas tank of the car closest to the hydrant would explode. Never happened! We didn’t need to attract any more cops into the neighborhood, that’s for sure.

My father made figures of shepherds and lambs out of noodle dough. My mother baked the dough and we put the figures under the tree.

On Christmas Eve, at 6 p.m., we would sit down to dinner and eat carp and cooked barley and mushrooms, koláče, apple strudel with rum, and coffee or tea. (The carp was freshly caught and we kept it in our washtub for a few days before we killed and ate it.) At midnight we went to Mass in the larger neighboring town of Kadov, three kilometers (1.8 miles) away. Of course, we had no electricity at that time, so we burned candles and used a kerosene lamp for light. On Christmas morning, we went to church again. The next day, we got an apple or orange as a present.

So you see, Christmas was different from today with so many presents exchanged. And we didn’t have such tree ornaments as you have. But it was lovely, just as it is for you.

We were blessed as kids. We usually got a toy or two and some clothes. That was a lot more than Mom got, judging from how she described her childhood Christmases to 8-year-old granddaughter Julie in 1977.

When I was a little girl in Pole, Czecho-slovakia, I lived in a little house in a small farming village. In fact, my house number was 4. We were the 4th house built in the village. There were eight other houses in our village.

My father would chop down an evergreen tree in the woods. He would cut a hole in a log and stick the bottom of the tree into it. We decorated the tree with all kinds of cookies and candies and real candles on the outer edges. We put an angel on top. On the heavier, lower branches on the tree, we hung little apples and walnuts.

A week or two after Christmas, the neighborhood kids gathered up all the dried, discarded trees and dragged them near a fire hydrant, since cars were not allowed to park there. The trees were set ablaze. A roaring rapid thunderbolt was heard as flames violently and quickly shot up over 20 feet high. Occasionally, people got concerned that the gas tank of the car closest to the hydrant would explode. Never happened! We didn’t need to attract any more cops into the neighborhood, that’s for sure.

My father made figures of shepherds and lambs out of noodle dough. My mother baked the dough and we put the figures under the tree.

On Christmas Eve, at 6 p.m., we would sit down to dinner and eat carp and cooked barley and mushrooms, koláče, apple strudel with rum, and coffee or tea. We got our Christmas presents a week or two before Christmas on St. Nicholas Day. We usually got stockings to wear or an orange to eat and cookies. If we were bad, we got coal in our stockings.

Life And Many Deaths in the Protektorat Bohemen und Mähren*
March 1939 – June 1945

Part 4: Summary of the Lasting Impact of Nazi Rule.
Here are my conclusion of the consequences, the damage, and the impact of the Nazi regime and the subsequent communist takeover on the Czechoslovak people.

1. The Destruction of Civil Society. Most voluntary associations, including Sokol, were abolished and their properties dismantled. Travel was greatly limited to single individuals or very small numbers of people traveling in groups. There was, of course, no freedom of information, religion, or assembly, and attempts to obtain other sources of knowledge and information were outlawed. Radios were altered to prevent listening to foreign broadcasts. People depended for information only from official propaganda, on rumors, or on very risky illegal listening of exile radio from London.

2. Creation of Major Moral and Spiritual Crises. Conditions of life made it difficult to distinguish between right and wrong, bravery and cowardice. Most people had to constantly rethink their values. Nazis understood that force, intimidation, and threats work; and Czech communists learned the same lessons.

3. Total Destruction of the Economy. Czechoslovakia’s well-established and balanced economy was integrated into the Nazi economy and war efforts. At the end of the war, few livestock remained, grain had been confiscated, and food rations, as small as they were in comparison with the Germans, could not be filled. Often, food was available only on the black market. As a student in the gymnasium, my typical lunch consisted of an apple and two slices of dark and mushy bread made from potato flour pasted with mustard.

4. Elimination of Intelligentsia. Educated leadership had been a principle target of Nazi enforcers. Thousands died in concentration camps. Survivors were tired and ill, and they hoped for normalcy by returning to conditions of the 1930s. No new educated people were being produced because the Nazis had closed and never reopened universities. The same thing happened to many gymnasias designed to develop future generations of leaders. Only the communists succeeded in replenishing their leadership and survived with the help of those returning from exile in Moscow. Under the communist rule, entry to all higher educational institutions was strictly controlled, was subjugated to the needs of the party and content of instruction in all institutions subjected to communist ideological training.

5. Disruption of Assumptions About The Past, The Present, and The Future. People use culturally-determined assumptions to compare their present lives with those from the past and with hope, or lack of hope, for the future. Without a sound education, Czechoslovaks had difficulty making comparisons accurately; the main point of comparison people remembered was the First Republic. The returning government-in-exile from London also looked back to the First Republic. In contrast, the communists offered an ideologically-determined utopia promising a good life for all. In a highly uncertain atmosphere, people became mired in the past, including the immediate past of injustice, loss, death, and ceaseless anxiety. Such mindsets nurtured their need to seek revenge against Germans for past wrongs. With seemingly universal agreement, Czechs felt that all Germans were bad Germans, and there was no possibility of a common life with them in the restructured Czechoslovakia. Sudeten Germans in particular, more than 80% of whom voted for a “return to the Reich” in the 1938 elections, were blamed for the death of the country.

6. Reinforcement of Collectivism. In a collectivistic society individuals are not valued except as members of a group. The Nazi period reinforced this orientation, which already had some hold dating from the Hapsburg period. Under Nazism, Czechs found themselves a psychological minority in their own country, governed by a numerical minority of Germans. As a result, Czechs saw themselves as a group that needed to preserve their endangered culture; they attempted to do so through a variety of means, such as music, theater, literature, and by memorializing of the past. But collectivism found its greatest expression in stereotyping Germans. From its beginning, the major underground organization found it necessary to keep sending messages to the Beneš government in London demanding that postwar settlements include the complete expulsion of all Germans. Beneš also favored such expulsions, but only for those proven to have harmed the Czechoslovak Republic, and accompanied with financial compensation.

Collectivism is a cultural, social, psychological, and political phenomenon that made it possible for the general acceptance of socialism in postwar Czechoslovakia. The Nazi regime was, of course, a primary example of a socialist country. In such circumstances, it was difficult to encourage a free enterprise system and market economy. We see the remnants of this mentality even in the present-day Czech and Slovak Republics.

7. Emergence of Fatalism. Related to collectivism is another cultural phenomenon, fatalism: the perceived loss of control over one’s life, choices, and hopes for the future. Fatalism breeds anger, hopelessness, helplessness, and envy against those seen as better off; plus it distorts one’s reasoning skills, fosters simplistic decisions, and focuses on emotional solutions for problems. Fatalism is difficult to change because it becomes coded in one’s brain, where it focuses on an exaggerated unpleasantness of the past. Some social and psychological research suggests those with unpleasant pasts tend to be unhappy and constantly disgruntled.

8. Damage to Human Relationships. By far the greatest damage, not often recognized, was to human relationships. Some Czechs became informants; as time passed their numbers increased. Many were informing on other people of free will, others under severe interrogations. This led to bottled-up emotions, lack of trust (often even between parents and children), and anxiety about speaking freely. Even members of underground organizations had to take care because if they were arrested, they knew they would be tortured to identify other members. Democracy depends on trusting relationships and belief in social institutions and government. Measuring levels of trust is difficult because we cannot assess its scope and intensity, nor can we determine it statistically. Once lost, it is exceptionally difficult to restore.
I started this series of articles with the idea that the Nazi period played a very important role in what followed in Czechoslovakia. Scholars suggest that it laid the groundwork for the communist takeover. I go beyond that. Everything I know tells me that Nazism was the cause not only of the loss of democracy in Czechoslovakia, but also of the Cold War, Soviet expansionism, and the division of the world into three kinds of nations: the free world, the socialist world, and the non-aligned world.

I ask that readers consider these eight points of damage not as separate analytic categories but rather as a set of conditions that worked together in a systematic, dynamic, and holistic fashion to shape Czech and Slovak culture, values, politics, economics, sociology, psychology, and indeed history. Czech and Slovak Republics citizens today may not agree with my ideas here, partly because very few who experienced the Nazi period are still alive, and partly because the people do not understand fully what really hit them under communism. I will devote my next article to that phenomenon.

Take a Quick Trip around the World

By Gwen Willems, Ph.D.

Retired University of Minnesota geneticist Jarda Cervenka has gone on to a prolific second career as a writer. Along with collected stories, his books include Travels of Missi One, about his ride down the Mississippi River with his son; It is Black and White, photographs with text; Howls from the Other Side, a collection of poems and collages; and Ambush and The Ivory Mask, two novels.

A standout is his first book of stories, Mal D’Afrique and Stories from Other Places. Later story collections are The Revenge of Underwater Man, Fausto’s Afternoon: Stories of the World, and Four Thorns of Kilimanjaro: Stories from Africa. Although he prefers Fausto’s Afternoon, Cervenka’s first book of stories made him a Minnesota Voices Project winner for its 17 stories based on real events. I remain fond of this debut collection, which is marked by charming, simple storytelling with descriptions of people and places he visited around the world.

The account of a storm’s aftermath in the Florida Keys story “Hurricane” is typical of Cervenka’s ability to write succinct, evocative sketches. After surviving the storm by concentrating on memories of the woman he loved in Norway four decades ago, he finds: “Silence ruled the space around them. The only sound came from somewhere in the wreckage. It was the high-pitched buzz of the seven-year cicada calling to all who might have survived the hurricane on Pelican Key. The white head of the old man lifted slowly and turned, his ear searching for the direction of the insect’s mating call.”

The title story follows a traveler in West Africa who after dealing with dangerous roads, dust, broken phones, street demonstrations, and other downsides of life in that region hears colleagues describe the Canadian woods full of pines and snow, which sounds “like nothing less than paradise.” The protagonist leaves Africa to live in a cabin on a quiet, sandy, Canadian river, but ironically yearns for West Africa: “I long to go to Africa again. Africa. I know my malady is incurable, its origin poorly understood. The French call it Mal D’Afrique.”

Cervenka has received the Richard Sullivan Prize for Fiction, the Frank Kafka Award, and the Blue Jacket Award. Born and educated in Prague, he also has lived in Minnesota, Kenya, Japan, and Nigeria.

His latest book is Four Thorns of Kilimanjaro (2012) with stories about a man whose best time in life was during war in Biafra, two young Americans who hitchhike in Kenya, a Peace Corps volunteer who disappears in the Niger River, and many others. Watch for my upcoming review.

Shifting Landscapes in Central Europe

Dr. Josef Mestenhauser’s columns are a familiar feature to regular readers of Slovo. We’re pleased to announce that a collection of his articles from 2007 to 2013 was recently published. Although Shifting Landscapes in Central Europe covers subjects as diverse as the meaning of the honorary consulate, the controversy surrounding the Czech gold, the philosophy behind and the nature of education, and what Dr. Mestenhauser refers to as “the lasting curse of Munich,” the significance of the book goes far beyond the issues and ideas inherent in each article. Shifting Landscapes provides us with the opportunity to consider the articles not as separate entities but as individual examples of a comprehensive attitude toward what it means to be Czech and, more importantly, what it means to be a citizen of the world. As if that were not enough, the book also deepens our appreciation of the extraordinary sense of history, place, culture, and philosophy behind Dr. Mestenhauser’s writing. The book’s publication is testimony to the honor that he does in gracing our Slovo pages with his always thoughtful, humanistic concerns.

Shifting Landscapes in Central Europe is available in book and text CD formats, as well as online. It may be purchased either at the Sokol gift shop or the CSCC website <cs-center.org>. Sales are a fundraiser both for Sokol and CSCC.

November/December 2013 Slovo 11
August C.S.P.S. Hall Visitor: Charity D. Tyler, Director of National Development, National Czech and Slovak Museum and Library in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, came to the Twin Cities in mid-August to learn about Czech and Slovak events in Minnesota. She toured C.S.P.S. Hall where she met with (Front L-R) Denis Novak (Sokol Minnesota president), Charity Tyler, Don Pakfo (Honorary Slovak Consul and director of Lipa Slovak Folk Dancers). (Back, with our puppets Jarda and Jitka) M. L. Kucera (Slovo), Joan Sedlacek (tour guide and C.S.P.S. Hall historian), Pat Slaber (Czechoslovak Genealogy Society International.), Jake Jacobson (St. Paul Czech and Slovak Folk Dancers). Missing: Christy Banks (Slovo), Deb and Arnie Ziskovsky (Domácí Czech Folk Dancers).

A Salute to the Mailing Party Crew that monthly tabs, labels, and zip code sorts each and every Slovo (L-R): Joan Sedlacek (who also takes the mailing trays to the bulk mail station), Val Kuisle, Mary Cahill (crew organizer), and Jason Brozovich. Appreciation also goes to the many other Sokol members and friends who come to mailing parties when they can. Best Wishes of the Season to everyone from your Slovo staff: Christy Banks, copy editor, M. L. Kucera, managing/production editors, and Deb Ziskovsky, label lists manager.
