28th Czech and Slovak Festival

11 a.m. - 5 p.m.
To volunteer: 651-290-0542

Visited Ride of the Kings in the first floor classroom, C.S.P.S. Hall.
If you missed the Sokol Minnesota culture booth at the Festival of Nations back in May, you probably would have been able to see various displays, including our historic sled, that represented Czech and Slovak culture. Doreen McKenney designed and created the display. The festival takes place on Sunday, September 24, from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. at C.S.P.S. Hall.

The story of the Ride of the Kings stems from the flight of the Hungarian king, Matthias Corvinus. After being defeated in battle at Bílovec in 1469 by his father-in-law, Jiří of Poděbrady, Corvinus escaped by dressing as a bride in traditional Moravian folk dress. In order to avoid detection, an elaborate headdress, complete with long ribbons, covered his face. To avoid talking and sounding like a man, Corvinus carried a long-stemmed rose between his lips. The Ride of the Kings is re-enacted during the last weekend in May in several Moravian towns and also during festival parades. Chanters lead the procession and call out to the viewers with jokes. Pageboys, who carry sabers, guard the king. Horses are elaborately decorated with colorful paper flowers and ribbons. Please bring your family and friends to our Czech and Slovak Festival. Be sure to see the Ride of the Kings horse, which will be on display in the first floor classroom.

I would like to thank Mike Sebek for his contributions to our Czech and Slovak Sokol Minnesota Board of Directors. Mike has served for several years as our sergeant-at-arms. Mike recently resigned from the Board of Directors due to family and other responsibilities. His background in business provided a valuable perspective to the Board. Construction and project management were special interests of Mike; he took a particular interest in building projects, like our new fire escape. We wish Mike well! Glynis Grostephan has agreed to be our new sergeant-at-arms; she will complete Mike's term. She became a member of Sokol Minnesota a year ago, and recently retired from a long career in education. Her interests include Czech language, cooking, events, genealogy, singing, and theater. Glynis has also enthusiastically volunteered to chair the silent auction for our 28th Czech and Slovak Festival; she has creative ideas for this Sokol Minnesota fund-raising activity.

The city of Saint Paul is in the final stages of approving the construction of a new shed under our fire escape. The shed will enclose the staircase that goes down to the basement. It will not only make the staircase more private, but also more secure for deliveries to C.S.P.S. Hall and the Pajarito restaurant. Sokol Minnesota recently received a micro grant from the West 7th Business Association to replace the fencing near the alley. The micro grant is much appreciated and will help us wrap up the construction projects on the north side of our property. When you attend the Czech and Slovak Festival, please take a look at the impressive new fire escape and other projects.

This article began when my family and I made our annual visit to the Festival of Nations in Saint Paul last May. We were impressed with the stunning Czech and Slovak display booth (Ride of the Kings) at the Cultural Exhibition Hall. That’s where I met Marit Lee Kucera, the Honorary Consul of the Czech Republic and Slovo’s managing editor.

I told Marit about my 2,000+ collection of ethnic, folk, and foreign dolls from around the world, which is what brings me to the festival each year. She then proceeded to begin my education on the presence and contribution of the Czech and Slovak people to the American Midwest.

Soon after, Marit asked me to write an article for Slovo about the dolls I have from the regions of the Czech Republic and the Slovak Republic. I am gladly sharing what I know (or think I know) about them, and would welcome any reader’s knowledge about the dolls. I am in the process of putting all of the dolls’ information and pictures online for a reference guide, so I would greatly appreciate any accurate information about them!

My collection started when my father’s college mentor (yes, they had those back in the forties), John L. Young, traveled the world for his job as a vice president of U.S. Steel, the world’s largest corporation for over forty years. John and his wife, Elizabeth, sent my sister and me each a doll from every country he worked in during the 1960s. We both have continued collecting.

Since my parents were teachers, our family would travel every summer in our trusty truck camper. Continuing a three-generation tradition, both my sister and I became teachers. I have continued collecting dolls, plus friends and family gift me with dolls from every corner of the world.

PHOTO ONE: This grouping of dolls is made of cornhusk that were popular tourist dolls in the 1970s from the then-communist country of Czechoslovakia. The girls dancing in a ring and the fiddler were purchased in 1970, in Dearborn, Michigan. The woman sitting on the bench and sewing came from a United Nations (U.N.) Gift Shop in Lansing, Michigan, in 1983.

PHOTO TWO: This Slovak couple (far left and third left), purchased from the U.N. shop in Lansing, Michigan in 1983, is stylized in design; the detail of these dolls is wonderful with embroidery. They, too, were popular in the 1960s and 70s, as my sister has a similar pair in her collection from the United Nations in New York City. Hers are labeled “Tatra.”

READERS, I ask you, could my pair be from another region? The carved wooden doll on the right, made in Germany, is part of a series of regional dolls. It is not surprising that a German doll maker would include parts of Czechoslovakia in his series, considering the long and entangled history the areas share. Although I purchased this doll in Brooklyn Park, Minnesota, in 1985, she is from the 1930s, which was a time of a great deal of German tourism in the region.

The smaller soft-rubber doll in the front (second left) depicts a schoolgirl, a popular tourist gift, purchased at the Lansing, Michigan, U.N. shop in 1986.

PHOTO THREE: This trio has a very interesting story to tell. My husband and I found them in a small store in a gas station near Portland, Maine, in 2015. They are exquisitely detailed and handmade silhouettes carved in and painted on wood. In addition, each piece has written in pencil a caption on the bottom that further illustrates the ties between regions of Czechoslovakia and Germany at a very pivotal time in history.

The trio depicts rural Slovaks in their finest traditional dress and a horse, perhaps for a festival. Written under the bases in pencil of each the men is “1931- Slovak” and under the woman is “Slovakin.” Then in German “von” (from) “Gaja” (a region in Slovakia noted for fine wineries) “sudman” (meaning south or southern in German).

the same doll company: Lidová tvorba, Slovak Home Industries (a communist collective), that was in production from the 1960s to early 1980s in communist Czechoslovakia. The dolls were made from highly flammable celluloid, but that did not stop production of these well-costumed examples. I have been told that the boy (in front) is possibly a “Kojovijan” with his red embroidered bolero jacket with ribbons, red pants with looped black embroidery, and flat-black hat with lace. I do not know for sure if this is true. Could anyone clear this up for me?

I was told that the doll on the far left was a schoolgirl. Moreover, I know no particulars about the doll in the middle wearing a red scarf and white puffed sleeves and pleated skirt. I found both in Lansing, Michigan, in 1984. Can anyone tell me more about them?

The seller said the doll on the right with a yellow lace collar and blue floral vest with pleated skirt was from Moravia, which is part of the Czech Republic. She was purchased in San Diego in 2016. However, that seller also said that she is a Piešťany doll, which means that she would be from present day Slovakia. Does any reader have any thoughts on this?

In sixteen dolls, we have covered several Czech and Slovak regions and history. My husband and I are planning to go to Prague to see this area of great diversity in culture and, of course, to find dolls to fill in the gaps in my collection. If anyone would like to give me information about the origin or cultural significance of these dolls, please contact me at <rvkbont@gmail.com>. I will be sure to report your help and findings back to Slovo!

Welcome to Sokol Minnesota!
A Wedding in Brno and a Visit to My Ancestral Villages

By Frank Trnka

This summer, I had the unique opportunity to be part of a Czech wedding in Brno, Moravia, Czech Republic. Lucie Šilerová and Martin Pešl invited me to play the organ for their July wedding. I first met them when Lucie came to the C.S.P.S. Hall in 2009 to examine the Sokol music and theater archives. Since then, the three of us have had a number of adventures together, both here in Minnesota and in various parts of the Czech Republic.

Being an integral part of a wedding is an opportunity not usually available to an American tourist. This was an exciting opportunity for me to become better acquainted with Czech culture, as well as an extreme challenge to see if I could function adequately on an unfamiliar instrument and also overcome the language barrier with my limited Czech.

The Church of The Holy Trinity (Kostel Nejsvětější Trojice) in Brno-Královo Pole was built in 1375; it was remodeled in the Baroque style between 1760 and 1777. The organ, however, was built in the 1950s during the Communist era, when the church was not given access to quality building materials to construct an organ. Unfortunately, this organ also has not been well maintained. It is a larger organ than I have played since I was a student 50-plus years ago. I was cautioned to expect some things not to work. I knew I would need a substantial amount of time to get used to the organ and to find ways to make it sound its best.

I arrived in Brno ten days before the wedding. During the first week, I spent four hours every day figuring out how to get the best possible sounds out of the organ. I also worked on my “travel independence.” The layout of Brno is not simple; there is a complex system of trams and buses covering the city and outlying areas. I took the tram to and from the church. I also explored and shopped on my own in Brno when I was not at the church practicing.

Lucie and Martin invited me on an outing to the Austrian border to pick up wine for the wedding. After I explored the historic city center of Znojmo, I went with them to the Znojmo vineyard for wine tasting. (As far as I have been able to determine, wine from Znojmo is the only Moravian wine available in the United States; it was served at the reception for Czech Prime Minister Bohuslav Sobotka when he visited the C.S.P.S. Hall in Saint Paul in April 2016.)

After five days in the guest room at Lucie’s and Martin’s, I moved into a flat vacated by Martin’s sister Eva, where I lodged for the rest of my Brno stay. This was closer to the city center, and also it provided a new neighborhood for me to explore. Fortunately, it was an easy tram ride to the church to practice organ.

There were four musicians involved in the wedding, the young church organist, a flutist, a singer, and myself. Josef Hanáček, the organist, had the task of explaining the workings of the organ to me with his limited English and my limited Czech (we used lots of gestures!). After Lucie had a chance to listen to the various pieces we had prepared, she determined that I would provide music while the wedding guests gathered, play the processional, and perform a short piece while the marriage license was being signed. Josef would play the organ music during the wedding mass and accompany the singer; the singer would accompany the flutist. Josef also would play the recessional. This division of music responsibilities removed some of my stress. If the weather were nice, the receiving line could be outside, and I would play loud music. If the receiving line were indoors due to rain, I would play quiet music. I needed about an hour’s worth of music prepared to be ready for whatever might happen.

The weather on the day of the wedding was hot with scattered thunderstorms. Since the sky was clear after the marriage ceremony, the receiving line took place outside, with no music needed, as everyone was outside by the time the recessional was over.

A car shuttle took everyone to the afternoon reception at the Olympia Train Park (Parková dráha Olympia Brno) where Lucie’s extended family has volunteered over the years. Part of this reception also included belly dance performances; Lucie is part of the belly dance troupe.

Frank Trnka at the Kostel Nejsvětější Trojice organ.

Frank Trnka (far right) enjoyed watching a traditional Czech wedding day custom that is meant to determine if the couple can work together to deal with difficulties. First the catering hostess presented the bridal couple with large shots of slivovice (slivovitz), then she threw a dish to the sidewalk and gave them a whiskbroom and dustpan to work together to sweep up every shard before they could enter the reception area. Lucie and Martin passed the test!

Czech and Slovak Cultural Center of Minnesota

Czech and Slovak Cultural Center of Minnesota (CSCC) held its planning board meeting on Saturday, August 19, at the University Club in Saint Paul. Main topics of discussion covered cultural event planning for 2017-2018, to be reported in Slovo in the upcoming October issue.

CSCC is a sponsor of the screening of Banjo Romantika, a film documentary of Czech musicians who play their own unique style of bluegrass music. It screens during the 12th Annual Harvest Jam Acoustic Music Experience, November 17 - 19 at the Minneapolis Marriott West Hotel in Saint Louis Park, with the Malina Brothers from the Czech Republic as the headliner band on Saturday evening, plus playing a 30-minute set on Friday night and a gospel set on Sunday morning. My connection with Lidice began in 1948 when my grandfather returned to his homeland and got soil from the fallen village. During a memorial service at Sokol Hall in Phillips, Wisconsin, it was sprinkled into a small vault by two young girls and buried at the foot of the Lidice Monument in Phillips. I was one of those girls. Due to the large populations of Czech/Slovak immigrants near Stern Park Gardens (renamed Crest Hill), Illinois, and Phillips, Wisconsin, two monuments exist today in the United States and annual memorial services are still held.

The events that took place in Lidice, June 10, 1942, are recorded as part of Holocaust history. It was one of the worst single atrocity of World War II. Citizens of the small village, entirely innocent, were chosen as scapegoats by Nazi leaders when General Reinhard Heydrich, by some accounts, creator of the “Final Solution,” died after an assassination attempt. At Lidice, 178 men were shot dead, all women sent to concentration camps, 82 children were gassed, and 6 died by other means. Seventeen Nordic-featured children were spared to be “Germanized.” Valuables were stolen; the village was burned, dynamited, and obliterated: an example made for plotting against the Third Reich.

Since that time, on June 10, Lidice is mentioned in world news. What makes the Lidice story notable and lasting is the fact that one citizen of Stoke-on-Trent, England, Barnett Stross, M.D., a member of the British Parliament, answered Hitler’s “Lidice Shall DIE Forever!” with “Lidice Shall LIVE!” The slogan and his resolve to help rebuild Lidice were approved by Parliament. The miners in his district initiated a fund to memorialize fellow miners by rebuilding Lidice. The message spread throughout the world. After rebuilding began in 1947, Dr. Stross suggested a rose garden of peace and friendship with people all over the world donating rose bushes and an art gallery to become a part of the memorial grounds. In 1967, a living tribute to the Lidice children and all child victims of war became a reality. The International Children’s Exhibition of Fine Arts, Lidice, has had 60-70 nations take part and the Lidice Repository holds over 500 pieces of art donated by renown artists the world-over. Dr. Stross died in 1967, but his message lives on and the Lidice Memorial stands today as a beacon of friendship and peace in a troubled world.

My interest in Lidice never diminished. I visited the new village while under Communist control twice, and twice since. After writing Lidice Remembered Around the World, I visited

8 September 2017 Slovo

Toni Brendel followed as two Czech military carried the large commemorative wreath from Phillips, Wisconsin, under the new government and interviewed two surviving “Lidice Children.” At present, on behalf of our festival committee, I stay in touch with people in Lidice, Czech Republic; Crest Hill, Illinois; Stoke-on-Trent, United Kingdom; and Quito, Ecuador.

I was honored to be invited to the 75th annual memorial service as an International Guest. My daughter, Tami Satre, accompanied me. It was fitting that the Phillips Czech/Slovak Community Festival Committee contributed rose bushes to the garden this year, and that a floral wreath was presented on its behalf during the anniversary service.

June 8, in Prague, we attended a program sponsored by Prague schools at Brožík’s Hall on Old Town Square. It was an impressive event with talented young people rendering music and drama, with a presentation of awards to students who captured the Lidice tragedy through art. There we met Ivona Kasalická, Curator of the International Children’s Exhibition of Fine Arts – Lidice. For the first time, I met Alan and Cheryl Gerrard, from Stoke-on-Trent, United Kingdom, with whom I had corresponded for over a year.

Realizing that after Dr. Stross died in 1967 and that people of Stoke forgot about his efforts and how deeply citizens were involved, Alan made an effort to renew the link between the two cities. They were hoping for an international show of support to renew the Lidice Shall Live movement and the deeper meaning of its existence today. Connecting with others having similar interests was made possible via the internet and we became acquainted in that way. After the program, we met together and talked of new ideas and that continued during the next few days. Alan spoke of his interest in getting musicians from other countries together to honor Lidice in the future. I thought of the many talented musicians I know, coincidentally, with Czech surnames.

June 9. That afternoon we travelled to Lidice for a welcome reception. It was pleasing to see the familiar faces of Mayor Veronika Kellerová and two “Lidice Children” I had interviewed in 2012. That evening, a Czech Army Band and two popular singers presented concerts. It was a beautiful starlit night and in addition to enjoyable music, my thoughts turned to my then-young Czech grandparents who left families and home villages to immigrate to America in 1905.

As students of veterinary medicine studying in Brno, we have many opportunities to study abroad, more than any previous generation in the Czech Republic. However, we never dreamed of the opportunity to pursue an internship in the United States. This year, we found out that America, specifically Minnesota, is much closer than we thought.

Thanks to the support of our university and to the help of Dr. Joyce Tesarek, Klára Tlačbabová and I stayed in Minneapolis for 35 days as guests of the Hermann family. The main goal of our trip was to intern at various veterinary clinics in Minneapolis. We observed skilled doctors and veterinary technicians during their work and learned many new things. Besides gaining work experience, we explored the Twin Cities by bikes. At the beginning of our stay, we enjoyed the Fourth of July celebration at Fort Snelling. This touch of history meant a lot to me, because I am involved in a living history group, which reenacts the involvement of US Army 2nd Infantry Division in the World War II liberation of my home town of Plzeň.

We always wanted to see the Great Lakes; our dream finally came true during the next weekend. We visited the city of Duluth and spent a great time in the lovely farmhouse of Joyce’s brother, John, in Superior, Wisconsin. Swimming in Lake Superior chilled me, but our visit to northern Minnesota was definitely a heart-warming experience.

Czech Kroje Donated to Sokol Minnesota
By Louise Wessinger

Two years ago at the annual Sokol Camp Booya Picnic in Pine City, Minnesota, I was approached by Mary Olson, who had recently seen a performance by the Saint Paul Czech and Slovak Folk Dancers. She told me that her aunt, Margaret Jablonsky of Dickinson, North Dakota, had made kroje (folk costumes) for a local Czech band and dance group. Mary was not sure what had become of those folk costumes, but she said her aunt was a wonderful seamstress, who had even added handmade Czech motifs to the sleeves.

About a week later, Mary’s cousin, Tammy Sattler called. She said that when her mother, Margaret, died, the costumes were donated to a small museum in Dickinson. Tammy said that she was willing to call and see if the costumes were being used. Upon learning that they were not, she went to Dickinson to pick up the ones that were still in good condition.

This spring, Tammy (pictured left) called me to say that she had retrieved, washed, and ironed the costumes. I met her in Detroit Lakes, where I picked up several women’s Bohemian folk dresses, a teen boy’s costume, and a young girl’s costume. There were also several extra red skirts. All the pieces were beautifully made and still have several years of dancing in them. Thank you, Mary Olson and Tammy Sattler, for your generous gift to Sokol Minnesota.

June 10. Brunch was provided for international guests. The following memorial ceremony was something I will never forget. Opening with Czech and Slovak national anthems, a military band played as young Czech Soldiers, two by two, made their way up a long winding path carrying wreaths to the foot of a huge cross under which the men of Lidice lay. Each delegation walked behind. Our wreath was number 59 and many more followed. After the service, we attended the opening of the 45th International Children’s Exhibition of Fine Arts – Lidice winner’s circle. It was unbelievable that such talent came from children ages 4 through 16 who represented over 60 nations. Lastly, dozens of school choirs performed. Sweet young voices penetrated a light breeze, gently toning down the heat of the day. Between groups, the crowd was hushed and one could feel that this place where a village once stood was surely a place of reverence.

June 11. Sunday was spent with the Kasalický family. After lunch we went to their home in Buštěhrad, near Lidice. We toured their neighborhood and then retreated from the hot sun under a huge umbrella in a small courtyard leading into their home. After much good conversation and more good food, we were taken back to our hotel.

June 12. Mgr. Martina Lehmannová, the Director of Lidice Memorial, and Ivona Kasalická bade us farewell and gifted several books on Lidice to the Phillips City Library. A driver took us back to Prague, courtesy of the Lidice Memorial. I will never forget the generosity, warmth, and friendship of the people now living in Lidice and we must never forget those who perished in 1942.

10 September 2017 Slovo
Leo Perutz’s By Night Under the Stone Bridge is not a light, summer read for the beach; but if you’re willing to work your way through its 198 pages, you’ll be rewarded. The collection comprises fourteen interconnected stories (some interesting, some confusing) that develop an overarching plot. The book is set in Prague in the early 1600s, when Holy Roman Emperor Rudolf II ruled over Bohemia.

Royal activities within the court are a farce. Rudolf routinely finds himself cheated by his courtiers, while his corrupt and spendthrift ways make him dependent on Mordechai Meisl, a prosperous under the king’s protection. But unbeknownst to Meisl, his wife and Rudolf are having an affair through a spirit transformation, which by the end of the book gives us and the Emperor.

Subplots bring together a rich mixture of history, mysticism, mystery, stunning scenery, legends, and romance. The fantastical nature of the book led one reader to post online, that if Lewis Carroll and Franz Kafka gave birth to a child, it would most likely be Perutz. (David, June 10, 2017, in his review on the Goodreads website <goodreads.com/book/show/642221.By_Night_Under_the_Stone_Bridge?from_search=true>)

A large cast of finely drawn characters immerses the reader in the story. In addition to Rudolf, Mordechai Meisl, and his beautiful wife, Esther, the narratives also feature blundering, Shakespearean-esque musicians, Koppel-the-bear and Jäckele-the-fool, the Great Rabbi Lowe, and a multitude of astrologers, alchemists, and adventurers.

Novelist and mathematician, Leo Perutz, was born in Prague in 1882 and lived in Vienna until the Nazi Anschluss in 1938, when he immigrated to Palestine. He returned to Vienna in the 1950s. Perutz wrote eleven novels, usually combining history and adventure with a metaphysical twist. Although often neglected among Central European masters, experts consider him a genius of the historical novel and a master of suspense.
