The holiday season at the C.S.P.S. Hall had many special activities. A very lively Svatý Mikuláš Children’s Holiday Party was held on Friday, December 4, 2015. Boys and girls from the Sokol gymnastics program performed and the Taneční Mládež and Teen Folk Dancers danced, including some four-year-old children who performed for the very first time. Another well-attended Svatý Mikuláš party was organized the following night by the families of the Czech & Slovak School Twin Cities. Some of the school’s children and their parents held a sleepover at the Hall.

Our Sokol Minnesota member Marit Lee Kucera was installed as the Czech Honorary Consul for the Upper Midwest on Saturday, December 5, 2015. Sokols, family members, friends from the Czech and Slovak community, and honorary consuls from the Twin Cities celebrated Marit’s installation. Jaroslav Zajiček, Deputy Chief of Mission at the Embassy of the Czech Republic in Washington, D.C., and Council General Bořek Lizec from Chicago officiated at the installation and attended both of the Svatý Mikuláš parties. They were very impressed with the high level of ethnic participation at our Hall. Marit began serving the Czech constituents in Minnesota, Iowa, North Dakota, and South Dakota on January 1, 2016. Congratulations, Marit!

At the Sokol Minnesota Annual Meeting in November 2015, several members were elected to open positions. Other members changed their responsibilities. Arnie Ziskovsky is a new member of the Board of Trustees and Steve Ernest is a new member-at-large on the Board of Directors. Megan Cahill, who has been a member of the Board of Directors for several years, decided to step down. Her ability to synthesize discussions and to keep ideas moving along will be missed at the monthly meetings. Thank you for your years of service to the Board of Directors, Megan.

You may have heard about the abrupt closing of the Glockenspiel Restaurant at the end of November. The Glockenspiel was a much-enjoyed community gathering place. Sokol Minnesota offered to extend the restaurant lease for six months, which was turned down. When news of the closing became public, several strong restaurant businesses approached Sokol Minnesota to discuss renting the space. Our goal is to secure a stable business that can establish a solid business. West 7th Street is becoming a popular Twin Cities destination and our space is quite desirable because it includes a liquor license. Negotiations are currently being conducted with a talented, knowledgeable restaurant group, which hopes to make concept, functional, and decorative changes to the space and then open an exciting new business.

If you were able to see one of the Havel films at the Trylon Microcinema in South Minneapolis in fall of 2013, you will want to mark your calendar for April 1, 2, and 3, 2016. The Trylon at 3258 Minnehaha Avenue, Minneapolis, has put together another Czech film series. Sokol Minnesota is one of the sponsors of the film series. The Trylon Microcinema is eager to have the Czech community see the films. Attendance is very important to this small theater that seats 50 people. If this series is well-attended, the owners may consider additional Czech series in the future. See you there! Nazdar!
At the annual meeting of Czech and Slovak Sokol Minnesota on November 20, Steve Ernest (member since 2014) was elected to the Board of Directors (BOD) as a Member at Large. FEATURED FRIDAY Members’ Meeting
February 19, 7 p.m.

Please join us for Pelíšky (Cozy Dens), 1999, an entertaining and engaging coming-of-age Czech film set in 1967 during the last few months leading up to the 1968 Prague Spring. Two families with different perspectives on communism and the future of Czechoslovakia become intertwined through marriage. Using the families’ humorous interactions, the film illustrates the vastly different opinions in Czechoslovakia at this time, and how hopes for the country’s development are dashed with the Russian/Warsaw Pact invasion. English subtitles.

After the film, we’ll have a brief discussion led by Sokol Minnesota and Czech and Slovak Cultural Center member Cheryl Nelson Theuninck and CSCC member Jan Knudtson. Please join us! Refreshments will be served.

November Pancake Breakfast
By Jason Brozovich

Our great kitchen team: Julie Bohn, Teresa Pojar, Dennis Cahill, Colleen Cahill, Alex Cho, Megan Cahill, Mary Cahill, Jason Brozovich, and Joan Sedlacek.

The smell of pancakes, French toast, and sausage filled the air at the Sokol Hall on November 22, 2015. From 9 a.m. to 1 p.m., 139 folks enjoyed the delicious breakfast, including a fruit cup, with coffee, orange juice, and milk. The weather was great, as were the volunteers! They took tickets, mixed batter, flipped pancakes and French toast, served guests, bussed dishes, and cleaned the Hall. Thank you all!

Let’s not forget the contribution of the Bake Sale and Crafter/Vendor Booths that day and all of the volunteers! Our teamwork brought in $1,944 to help with the maintenance of our historic building. Together, we put forth a great event!

Chairs were Jason Brozovich and Megan Cahill: breakfast; Doreen McKenney: bake sale; and Jean Draheim: vendors. Volunteers included Rosemary Baisden, Julie Bohn, Colleen Cahill, Dennis Cahill, Mary Cahill, Alex Cho, Cindy Coulter, Jake Jacobson, Bob Kostichka, Denis Novak, Teresa Pojar, Joan Sedlacek, Cinnamon Whaley, and Girl Scout Troop 55398.

Jim Chlebecek, Mary Jo Chlebecek, Jake Jacobson, Joyce Tesarek, and Phyllis Vosejpka ($10 cash) donated baked goods and/or helped at the bakery table.

On November 19, Mary Jo Chlebecek, Roger Green, Danita Larson, Doreen McKenney, and Joan Sedlacek baked 80 dozen koláče.

Broučci (The Fireflies): Performance on Sunday, May 15, at 3 p.m. By Judith Brin Ingber

How did a small theatre musical in the unlikely setting of a ghetto outside Prague during World War II blossom into a new production in Minnesota this spring of 2016? I grew up in peaceful Minneapolis, but some time ago, I became fascinated with what happened in Europe during World War II and, especially, what happened to Jewish dancers in that time. For many years I have been researching, lecturing, and writing about Jewish artistic activity and artists despite their terrible plights in European cities conquered by the Nazis. Jewish families and individuals were rounded up and sent by trains to transit camps, ghettos, and concentrations camps. I was amazed to find documentation of performances of all kinds and even of teaching in these seemingly impossible situations.

For example, children drew and wrote poems in Terezín. Years ago I saw a touching book, I Never Saw Another Butterfly, created from children’s drawings and poems somehow saved from Terezín. This book pushed me to learn what I could about what happened artistically in Terezín. I first visited the ghetto/camp in 1971 with Dr. Karel Lagus, who was one of the directors of the camp site under the communists. I was introduced to Dr. Lagus through our family’s friend, Eddie Grosmann. Mr. Grosmann, originally from western Czechoslovakia, was deported as a young man during World War II to Auschwitz. There he met a distinguished lawyer from Prague named Dr. Karel Lagus who had first been imprisoned in Terezín and then transported to Auschwitz. He managed to give Eddie hope and courage. Luckily both men survived. Eddie came to the United States and settled in Minneapolis. Dr. Lagus returned to Prague, where he later became, ironically, one of the directors of the museum at Terezín.

In my search to learn more about Friedl Dicker-Brandeis, the art teacher who inspired the children, I traveled to the Holocaust center in Jerusalem called Yad Vashem. That’s where I learned Friedl not only taught and inspired the Terezín children through her art and writing classes but she also worked on performances with the children. At Yad Vashem I also learned about the actress Vava (or Nava) Shean who acted in many performances in Terezín. In the camp she met the choreographer Kamila Rosenbaumová who had the idea they could create a musical drama based on the children’s book Broučci, which many of the children had with them when they were deported to Terezín. It was an obvious choice for the production. Vava, Friedl, and Kamila enlisted the help of the composer Karel Švenk and others to make the performances happen.

Last winter in Prague I visited the Jewish Museum and found flyers printed at Terezín advertising the Broučci production, as well as tickets to the performances and other surprising information. I also returned to Terezín, where I visited the little attic theatre where the performances took place. That’s when I determined to recreate a performance of Broučci as an ode and elegy to both the adult creators and the child performers of this unique work. Of the 1,200 children who passed through Terezín, only some 100 survived, but Broučci was meant as a way to engage the children, to allow them to create something special together using the imaginative characters of fireflies and their animal friends in the cycle of life.

A few months ago I traveled to Tel Aviv and was able to interview Vera Meisels, who had been a child performer in the Terezín Broučci performances. While I was in Israel, I also visited Kibbutz Givat Hayyim, which has a museum to all that happened in Terezín including a whole children’s section with some of the paintings inspired by Friedl’s classes. Broučci, an enchanting story, is a well-known Czech folktale of the little boy/firefly who barely survives the winter and famine to fly out above the fields in the spring. He meets a little girl/firefly whom he marries in the final scene. Even though this is a tale that was made into a performance seventy years ago, the kind of conditions that prompted its creation continue to exist in the world. The United Nations keeps statistics on refugees, and today there are over 30 million children in the world displaced by the scourge of war and persecution. I think Broučci provides several important universal themes to help us envision something better even when things are terrible.

It is touching that once again children will perform Broučci. How did that happen? It came about through my friendship with Blanka Bricha, who introduced me to Sokol Minnesota and to Lena Bragg who runs the drama program for children. When I proposed the idea of recreating Broučci, it was decided that would make a fine project for this year’s program with help from Louise Wessinger and her dancers and the singers of Sokol Minnesota. It’s a privilege and an honor that so many are helping to do a new production of Broučci.

I am very excited to have the opportunity to create this performance with the children of Cesťa a slovenská škola Twin Cities (Czech & Slovak School Twin Cities) together with Taneční Mládež and many others from the Czech and Slovak community.

Our performance of Broučci will be on Sunday, May 15, at 3 p.m. at the C.S.P.S. Hall. Put it onto your calendar now and we’ll be excited to have you in our audience.

MOVIE REVIEW: ŽELARY

By Cinnamon Whaley

Želary (2003) opens in 1943 Prague by introducing us to couple Richard and Eliška, a doctor and nurse. They are a part of the Nazi resistance, running messages and helping those being persecuted. One morning, their friend Slávek comes to Eliška’s home with news that Richard has emigrated and has left Eliška papers to do the same, with the expectation that she leave immediately with one of the patients they’d recently treated at the hospital. Eliška leaves with Joza, a man roughly twenty years her senior, to return to his home village of Želary, in the mountains. They arrive with Eliška taking on the identity of Hana, who has returned with Joza from Prague to marry. Moving without warning from the bustle of Prague to the mountains with the expectation of marrying a stranger in a home without electricity leaves Hana in the state you would expect. She tries to leave once, but finds that Slávek has been killed and now truly understands that she must stay hidden in the mountains or likely be killed. Over the course of the summer months of 1943 she settles in to the community, finds friendship and joy, and after a while, love.

From within the village of Želary, the last two years of World War II are beautifully portrayed in the western Carpathian mountains. We are offered a glimpse into what it was like to be of the last generations privy to such seclusion before modernity began to reach the rural areas. The story of a young urban woman falling in love with a rural stranger would not usually catch my attention, but this was told so well that I would recommend it on a number of merits: the story, acting, scenery, and sound were all fantastic. It is nearly two-and-a-half hours long, but the anticipation as the film progresses would keep you from believing that much time has passed.

Our Experience with Česká a slovenská škola Twin Cities at Sokol Minnesota

. . . Let’s Stay Compatriots

By Markéta Drbohlavová

We arrived in Minneapolis one-and-a-half years ago, living here for the period of my husband’s contract assignment. Although my husband and I went through training concerning life in the United States, in the beginning living here was more difficult than we expected. While it was not our first longtime placement abroad, the differences between Europe and the United States are striking. My search for a Czech organization to help us get accustomed to life in the Twin Cities started when we remembered our coach’s comments that he always went to the Sokol in New York to drink a beer if he felt homesick while working his job there.

Before our departure from the Czech Republic, I had no time to search online for new contacts living in the area of our future apartment. Now, I see that this was a big mistake. It would have made our lives easier by helping us to overcome initial obstacles and homesickness during the first months.

Our first meeting with members of Sokol Minnesota took place during the Czech and Slovak Festival in 2014, after we had already spent three months in the United States. I was very pleased how we were welcomed and what a nice program was prepared. The theater performance in Czech was an especially nice surprise for our kids. We tasted with pleasure the guláš and Czech cakes, and we participated in the children’s games.

After that, I kept an eye on the schedule on Facebook and participated in Family Night every month, which we really enjoyed, first because we like small art work for kids and the reading of a Czech book. Next, we went because of the excellent Czech food (everybody prepares something), and lastly because of the friendly chatting. I especially admire the Czech lessons for kids that take place once a week because I know very well how difficult this language is to learn.

Dancing in folk dress contributes significantly to the keeping of tradition, too. To tell the truth, it was the first experience my children had with folk dancing and folk dress because we do not come from an area where these traditions are maintained. I consider Sokol’s scheduled events for St. Nicolas and Easter to be important because they are cornerstone Czech traditions for kids. I am also grateful for the group’s baking of Czech cakes and sweets because there is so much work and giving up of free time associated with it.

Our family participated in several meetings beyond the scheduled events, and these really were an “oasis” for me to speak in Czech and to collect experiences from life in the U.S. English has always been a third foreign language for me, so to make friends in English was not simple. I really appreciated all the recommendations I received concerning traveling or weekend programs.

To be honest, I was surprised how active the Czech and Slovak community is here and how well traditions are kept up, sometimes better than in some areas in the Czech or Slovak Republics. I would like to mention too, it was very pleasant to encounter the Slovak language (for our kids, it was the first time in their lives). I believe that everyone feels like continuing to participate in scheduled events and possibly to create one in the future!

Wintertime Reading

By Vanda Kofroňová, columnist from Prague

What is the last book you read? .... the last Czech book? I offer you a short list of books you should definitely check out if:

. . . You want to know about Czech sense of humor. Well, The Good Soldier Švejk (Osudy dobrého vojáka Švejka za světové války) by Jaroslav Hašek is considered the basic. To be honest, I have never read it. I do not like Švejk’s incompetence (even though he always manages to display it to irritate and passively resist the Austrian military authorities, as the textbooks say). What do I like much more is Saturnin by Zdeněk Jirotka. This is an example of intelligent Czech humor. The main hero is an archetypal “faithful servant,” who always hopes for unusual orders, and he will fulfill them even if he was not asked. A contemporary writer I really like is Benjamin Kuras. Czechs and Balances: A Nation’s Survival Kit is a must-read for anybody who is interested in history.

. . . You want to know something about Czech fears and depressions. There is a wide range of novels you can read, if you really want to feel the weight of life on this planet. Among my favorite authors is Franz Kafka, whose book The Trial made it to number three of the most important books of the 20th Century according to the French newspaper Le Monde. I love Milan Kundera (who is more French than Czech now). His book Zert (The Joke) describes what happens when humor is considered dangerous. And you can also try one from Michal Viewegh. The best-selling contemporary Czech author describes the “champagne problems” of this rich generation… until he almost died from a serious heart problem in 2012 which has left him too ill to write.

. . . If you want to read about Czech history in the 20th Century, you need to be prepared: it is not going to be very pleasant reading. Arnošt Lustig, a Jew imprisoned by Nazis in a concentration camp, never lost his optimism and his ability to elegantly describe the worst things that human beings can endure. My personal favorite is Josef Škvorecký. If you do not know where to start, try Škvorecký’s Zhabělíci (The Cowsards), which is his best-known story. And read Václav Havel. This is on my 2016 to-do list as well.

We also have quite a few contemporary authors that are pretty good but are not yet (as far as I know) available in English. So for those who can read Czech, I suggest Milan Urban and his modern gothic novels; Kateřina Tučková, who has only written two books, both of them breathtaking; and Jiří Hájíček, who writes about problems in the Czech countryside.

Have a great time with your books!

What are the books from the United States I should not miss?

A Pole Looks at Czech People and History
By Gwen Willems, Ph.D.

Mariusz Szczygiel’s simple, succinct, and first-person style of writing, combined with the book’s subtitle, Mostly True Stories, could make a reader suspicious of the authenticity of the stories in this book. But Polish journalist Szczygiel’s extensive research, numerous interviews, and his stellar reputation lead me to conclude that he told the most objective truth he could discover, with doses of humor and tragedy. The book, Gottland, includes a long list of sources he researched and a brief Czech time line.

In Gottland, Szczygiel is a Pole exploring the extraordinary reality of Czechoslovakia and the Czech Republic in the twentieth century through stories of resilient individuals living in difficult times. To examine the ravages of totalitarianism and its long-term effects, he focuses on stories of famous and unusual Czechs, such as the beautiful actress Lída Baarová, who befriended the infamous Nazi Goebbels; Otakar Švec, the unfortunate sculptor who won the competition to design a massive statue of Joseph Stalin in Prague and whose life ended in suicide; and Zdeněk Adamec, who died of self-immolation in 2003. Szczygiel named the book after the pop singer Karel Gott, who played along with communism to avoid being its victim and opened a self-aggrandizing museum, Gottland, akin to Dollywood, in 2006. One of my favorite pieces in this collection is about the famous Baťa shoe company. It started in the small town of Zlín and grew into a worldwide enterprise that continued to be led by Baťa family members in Zlín until they fled the Nazis takeover of Czechoslovakia. Cobbler Tomáš Baťa, out of the desperation of poverty, turned in the late 1800s to using canvas in shoes when he couldn’t afford leather. They were a hit. He built his first shoe factory, employing 50 men in a space of 2,000 square feet. He visited the United States to learn about the assembly-line efficiency of Henry Ford, and returned home where he made Baťa into a massive, time-centric factory in a company town. Baťa constructed identical small houses, organized peoples’ social lives, and told workers what to eat and how to behave. Upon Tomáš’s death, his brother Jan took over leadership of the company. In 1937, Jan created a new way to oversee his workers, what Szczygiel describes as “his own mobile office space which follows his employees about the building. He placed the office in a glazed elevator which moves up and down the tower block. This cabin is 16 x 16 feet, and has a sink with hot running water, a radio, and air conditioning.” Tourists can still visit this moving office today.

Szczygiel is a reporter for Gazeta Wyborcza, author of several books, and head of the Institute of Reportage in Warsaw. He won the 2009 Europe Book Prize for Gottland and was named “Journalist of the Year” in Poland in 2013. Gwen is coordinator of the Literary Ventures: Czech and Slovak book discussion group. Stibal Family Donation to The National Czech and Slovak Museum

By Denise Stibal

What to do with 100 years’ worth of family musical memorabilia? Thanks to a suggestion from Czech Honorary Consul Marit Lee Kucera, I contacted the National Czech and Slovak Museum in Cedar Rapids, Iowa. My story goes back to the early 1900s, starting with my Great-grandfather Joseph Stibal. He was widely known as a band man, musician, and director of a dozen or more bands and orchestras for nearly 50 years in Silver Lake, Minnesota. His life history begins with music back in 1875, when as a boy of 14 he came with his parents from Malešín in Bohemia to settle in McLeod County. He played with many dance bands and was exceptionally talented on the clarinet. During these years he played in Twin Cities orchestras and for some time was a member of the Grand Theater Orchestra in Saint Paul. But city life did not appeal to him and he returned to Silver Lake, organized a dance band of his own, married Anna Shimek, and settled on her father’s farm. It was in those days that musical organizations in the Twin Cities rated him as one of the best clarinet players in the state. He was a member of Saint Joseph’s Catholic Church from its beginning and was largely responsible for the purchase of its first organ. He played that organ at services for many years. Among his belongings were sheet music and letters from Bohemia and a catalog of religious items, along with his two clarinets, left to my father, Raymond Stibal.

Grandpa Joseph recognized the musical potential in “young Raymond” and arranged clarinet lessons from a member of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra. Raymond played for many years with the Jerry Dostal Band and Wally Pikal’s Wally and the Dill Pickles band until the mid 1960s, when he decided to devote his time exclusively to farming. In this collection there were many 78 rpm recordings of Czech dance music and of his Selmer clarinet, which was probably his prized possession.

In November, I met with Dave Muhlena, the library director in Cedar Rapids, and donated our family collection. Dave was delightful to meet with and made me feel like I made a valuable contribution to the library. We also toured the newly-rebuilt facility, which is beautiful. The library was heavily damaged in the flood of 2008, but with donations of $200,000 from the Czech Government, federal grants, and private funds, the museum was able to move and expand the library to a building that will preserve many years of Czech-American History. I encourage everyone to visit and spend some time nearby in the Czech Village. You can visit the website: <www.ncsml.org> for further information.

Slovak Honorary Consuls Met at the Office of the Slovak Ambassador to the United Nations

By Donald Pafko, the Honorary Consul for the Slovak Republic for Minnesota

Over one hundred Slovak business professionals attended the three-day meeting beginning on November 20, 2015, stressing business and economic development, plus foreign investment and trade negotiations.

It was interesting to note the number of successful Slovak business professionals who are working in the United States.

All-day seminars continued for Honorary Consuls emphasizing consular duties and responsibilities, passport and visas, consul protocol, and networking with Slovak professionals. Slovak Consul General Jana Trnovcová hosted the seminars. Slovak Ambassador to the United States Peter Kmec led the roundtable discussions, which focused on business and economic networking between the United States and Slovakia. Ten of the fourteen Honorary Slovak Consuls in the United States attended this seminar.
