When these comments arrive in your mail, it will be mid-autumn. The crops will be harvested. In my case that means the tomatoes, planted very late in June, are either ripe and eaten or green and sitting on the windowsill where I hope they will ripen. The grandkids are all settled back in school and the pool is closed for the season. The past few months have been a mixture of joys and sorrow. My grandson Tommy skated on the U.S. Under-17 Select Hockey team that played in Trnava, Slovakia, at the Five Nations Tournament and won the gold medal. On the sad side, my dog Reggie, a companion for almost fourteen years, had to be put down. So life goes on.

At Sokol Minnesota, our fall festival is over and our next big event is the Czech Roast Pork Dinner on Sunday, October 27, at 12:30. This is one of the events that lured me into joining Sokol. I encourage you to join me and enjoy a big plate of roast pork, raised-bread dumplings, and sauerkraut. Coffee and dessert are also included in the $16 price. For a few extra dollars we will also sell you a beer. This combination of foods is considered by many to be the national dish of the Czech people. I agree.

There are two important events coming up in November, and it’s not too early to start thinking about them. The first is the General Membership Meeting on Friday, November 22. This is the meeting at which you, the members of Sokol Minnesota, elect officers to serve on the Board of Directors. You can suggest people, or volunteer yourself, to become board members or to take leadership roles for various activities. This is your best chance to speak up and set the tone for Sokol activities for the next year. Too few members attend the quarterly membership events. Only two non-board members attended the August meeting and they came with daughters who are on the BOD. I hope this low attendance was a result of the oppressive heat rather than a lack of interest in how our organization is run. This year we are trying quarterly member/business meetings with a program rather than monthly meetings, in an effort to increase attendance. Perhaps we went the wrong way. In any case, there are no mind readers on the current BOD. Step up, speak out, and serve. Call me at 651-459-9404 and I will listen to your suggestions.

Next, on November 24, we will hold a Pancake Breakfast along with a Holiday Craft Sale and Bake Sale. This is a chance to buy kolác and other ethnic goodies prior to Thanksgiving and eat a good breakfast as well. Pre-order koláče at 952-941-0426 to be sure they will be available for you. This is also a chance to tour the Hall and see the results of your Legacy Fund Donations. Reservations are not needed for the breakfast.

I end with an old Czech proverb. When there is lightning in October, winter creeps in. I hope not this year. We had snow on too many events last winter. Nazdar!
Membership Updates
By Norm Petrik, Membership Director
At the August 23 membership meeting, one couple, John and Gina Liemandt, were accepted into membership in Sokol Minnesota. Gina (Roers) has been a member of Sokol Minnesota; now she and John are joining as a couple. They had their wedding reception at C.S.P.S. Hall on August 17. They have interests in cooking, language, films, music, and festivals. Welcome to Sokol Minnesota!

Our next membership meeting is November 22.

Finance Committee Report By Joe Landsberger, Project Planning Task Force, and Joyce Tesarek, Fundraising Chair

Sokol Minnesota’s Finance Committee oversees not only the budget, but also raising money to support activities, programming, and maintenance of our C.S.P.S. Hall. Capital projects, an important part of this stewardship, are frequently not covered in the annual budgets. In 2008, in celebration of the Hall’s upcoming 125th anniversary, the Board of Directors created a Project Planning Task Force (PPTF) to list and prioritize major projects. Upgrade of heating and plumbing systems and installation of a fire-suppression sprinkling system are now completed, at a cost of $320,746. We are finalizing the cost of air conditioning. Of course, there are more projects to come, and the PPTF has engaged the services of the architectural firm of Miller Dunwiddie to help us plan and prioritize how our Hall should serve us in the next 125 years!

The day-to-day operational expenses also must be paid for. These include insurance, utilities, programming expenses, and even expenditures for our fundraising events such as dinners and festivals. With the installation of our sprinkling system and the improved heating and plumbing systems, we should see a reduction in the cost of insurance. Recently, our property taxes were reduced. Aided by Jennifer L. Urban of the Urban Law Group, county assessors reviewed the property taxes we pay on our building. The revised valuation has been accepted by Ramsey County; in the future we will be tax exempt on 48% of our building’s evaluation of $563,000 due to our 501(c)3 status as a non-profit organization. The annual savings will be over $10,000. The restaurant, as a commercial enterprise, will be responsible for the remainder. This is quite a savings to our budget!

In the next few months, we will present more detailed financial information. As Sokol Minnesota adapts to the demands of the 21st Century, we will realign expenses and income to reflect those changes. We count on you to continue to support Sokol as a cultural, historic, and fitness organization. Meanwhile, the Finance Committee will continue our efforts to practice good stewardship.

August 2013 Board of Directors (BOD) Meeting
By Cindy Coulter

The BOD approved a donation on behalf of Sokol Minnesota to Robin Magnuson-Harkness in memory of her husband, Dan Harkness, who passed away unexpectedly this summer. Robin has been a cherished employee as Sokol Minnesota’s primary Gaming ticket seller for 25 years, along with the help of her daughter Brenda Magnuson. In efforts to improve the Gaming records and computerize them through new software, a Gaming consultant is under consideration.

Czech and Slovak Sokol Minnesota has reached-out to the C.S.P.S. Hall neighbors to receive their input on Sokol Minnesota’s impact in the community. Positive feedback has been received regarding the theme dinners, events, and educational programs. Increased marketing is needed to get the word out to newcomers and families who have recently moved into the neighborhood so they can take advantage of the fitness, educational, cultural, and social programs that Sokol Minnesota offers to them right in their “backyard!”

As we gear-up for Sokol Minnesota’s fall events, we are seeking volunteers for the October 27 Pork Dinner and the November 24 Pancake Breakfast. Behind the scenes, the BOD is planning for the New Year by approving the 2014 Calendar of Events which includes a January C.S.P.S. Hall rental for the CD release fundraiser for the Rose Ensemble, a Saint Paul-based music group, which is primarily vocal, specializes in medieval to modern music from around the world.
The Prague Story Today
By Vanda Kašová, Columnist from Prague

It was August 21. I was lying on beautiful beach in Croatia and there should have been nothing more distant from my thoughts than tanks on the banks of the river Vltava 45 years ago in Prague. But I could not help it. To my mind came a black-and-white picture that I saw somewhere a few years ago. Five maybe six tanks in the lower part of Palacký Square heading towards Anděl on the other side of the river. Armed foreign soldiers from the Soviet Bloc’s Warsaw Pact (Soviet Union, Poland, East Germany, Bulgaria, and Hungary) were in Prague, ending forever the Prague Spring. There were some people milling around and the Castle was above in the background. The despair! My lucky generation cannot even imagine the horrors of those days. And I started to think about people, for whom those terrible views were their last memories of Prague. What would they see today?

The very same banks of Vltava in the very heart of the city, which were occupied by tanks in 1968, are now some of the liveliest places in Prague. When the weather is nice, it so great to sit by the river on Náplavka (which is only a few centimeters above water level), have a beer, and talk with friends. What fabulous scenery! On Friday night, there is live music and DJs. The party goes on for hours till you get cold and have to run to catch a taxi to get back home.

This is what has changed a lot in a last few years. In every possible place, on the roofs of buildings, in the old factories and houses and many courtyards, there is a space for a new café, arts exhibition, or design market. Every weekend farmers markets emerge in numerous places, and the merchants sell fruits and vegetables and meat from their own farms. You can have lunch, buy a delicious fresh fish, enjoy lemonade and koláče, and spend a sunny day there.

And this is what I love about the place. Almost any time you go out, you can be surprised; you can discover something new. And I am not a newcomer to Prague; I have been discovering it for almost 30 years now. And this is what people who come to Prague, maybe after dozens of years, should see: Prague blossoming again!

Sokol Member News  By Marlene Hinshaw

We welcome new member John Liemandt. John married Sokol member Gina Roers on August 17. Their wedding party was held at the C.S.P.S. Hall. Gina is the daughter of Sokol members Jan and Mike Roers of Wadena, Minnesota. She is also the niece of longtime member Joyce Tesarek. Congratulations to Gina and John on their marriage! We look forward to sharing friendship and good times with you.

Sadly, I announce the death of longtime member Eugene (Gene) L. Kubes, age 86. Gene was an intelligent and interesting guy. He retired as a Ramsey County Family Court Referee. He was very proud of his full Czech heritage and liked visiting his Czech relatives and friends in the New Prague area. He was very interested in genealogy and loved to fish. I’ll miss having conversations with him. He attended and supported many Sokol events over the years.

Congratulations to Steve Fritze! Steve, a recently retired CFO of Saint Paul-based Ecolab, Inc., has been appointed to serve on the Otter Tail Corporation board of directors. Full retirement doesn't seem to be in Steve's future.

Help me gather news about our members: marle5421@aol.com or 651-340-8619. Thanks!

To keep interest in Czech heritage alive among young people, The Czech Heritage Junior Royalty, based New Prague, has started its search for candidates for the 2014 Junior Ambassadors. Candidacy is open to both boys and girls of Czech descent ages 9 through 15, with no residency restrictions. Four individuals are selected to promote their Czech heritage and the Czech community for a one-year reign. The prize package includes a crown, sash, a one-year membership to the Domaci Czech Folk Dancers, and a monetary award after completion of their reign. The Coronation is at 3 p.m., Sunday, December 8 in New Prague at the American Legion Park Ballroom. Festivities include the 4th annual European Christmas Event from 11 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. For more information, contact Deb Ziskovsky, Czech Heritage Junior Royalty Director, 952-652-2677 or <ADZiskovsky@aol.com>
Discover Czechoslovak Literature through a Century of Short Stories By Gwen Willems, Ph.D.

These 20 Czechoslovak stories by 20 authors vary in length, setting, and style, but all are memorable slices of life with social significance and a deep humanist moral. Many of the authors are familiar: Karel Čapek, Jaroslav Hašek, Bohumil Hrabal, Ivan Klíma, Arnošt Lustig, Božena Němcová, Jan Neruda, Ivan Olbracht, and Josef Škvorecký. Years of original publication would have been a welcome addition.

The characters search for answers to ethical questions. As the editor noted, “Death and authority tread through almost all of these pages—death the ever-present companion of an oppressed people, authority which was and is omnipresent all over Central Europe.” Yet the stories are not as heavy as this suggests. Among my favorites are:

“Three Men and a Shark,” by Hašek. After a boisterous night out, three men who made their livings in somewhat dubious ways—a former editor of The Animal World, a snake tamer, and a carousel proprietor—stroll through Prague. They see an unusual fish in a seafood-shop window, buy it, and begin raising money by performing shows in small towns, telling tall tales about the shark. Throughout their comic adventures, the decomposing shark becomes smellier and smellier and the trio gets into more trouble.

“The Great Catholic Water Fast,” by Škvorecký. A boy living in mostly atheist Czechoslovakia has a head full of mysterious Bible stories, a fascination with religious rites and his uncle the priest, and little guidance. To one-up other boasting boys at summer camp, he claims Catholics have a three-day fast excluding beverages made with water. The next morning he begins attempting his invented fast.

“Mordair,” by Nesvadba. In this science-fiction story, a new airline seems to have none of the discomforts of other airlines. Mordair flights are cheap, on schedule, and never cancelled nor involved in accidents, but it also has no lobbies for refueling, and that is the mystery.

“Journey to a Dead Man,” by Klíma. With his typical clarity of language, Klíma takes us along with a doctor called to a pub when a body is found under a table early one morning. The exhausted doctor examines the body at the cemetery and then is reluctantly prodded by his driver to visit various people and sites to investigate the man’s life, death, and how his body ended up unnoticed for hours.

“Gabor, Gabor …,” by Aškenázy. This tender and wise father-son story is told from the perspective of the loving father, Big Gabor. Little Gabor is his father’s delight. At school, Little Gabor becomes a star pupil who makes his father proud. Passages about sterilization and the “gipsy problem” set the stage for escalation of Nazi discrimination against Romani people.

You’re invited to join Literary Ventures on Saturdays from 10 a.m. to noon:

Life and Many Deaths in the Protektorat Bohemen und Maehren*
March 1939 – June 1945
By Dr. Josef A. Mestenhauser, Distinguished International Professor Emeritus, University of Minnesota, Department of Educational Policy and Administration, Comparative and International Development Education Honorary Consul of the Czech Republic (1999-2009)
Editor’s note: This article originally appeared on the CSCC website <cs-center.org>.

The past two articles about the Nazi occupation of the former Czechoslovakia were largely descriptive. I relied on my own and my family’s experience, on substantial readings and accounts of others, and most recently on a brilliantly documented book by Chad Bryant entitled Prague in Black. This study was written in the style of the best historiographies and was researched meticulously, and it received acclaim from historians specializing in Central Europe. Yet I found a few things missing and other things were too highly generalized to satisfy my curiosity.

These shortcomings are not a failure of the individual writer, but a failure of our fragmented knowledge, the result of being vested in highly-specialized academic disciplines and sub-disciplines that have their own culture and standards for writing. For example, Bryant’s style is highly objective and written from the position of a disinterested observer, even when he is dealing with the most intimate emotions, ethnic conflicts, deaths, suppression of all rights, and the most brutal force used against entire populations. To capture these perspectives would require the writer to reach out to other disciplines such as philosophy, psychology, linguistics, and most importantly from my point of view, anthropology.

The trouble with knowledge specific to a discipline is that scholars, and for that matter consultants, tend to give the impression that they are providing a complete and exhaustive picture and do not search for “other knowledge.” They consider themselves to be “experts” whose education has focused entirely on specialized knowledge, no matter how much educational institutions claim they provide balanced, interdisciplinary training.

Historians tend to have another bias, one that explains things chronologically as if history was linear and continual. History indeed has continuity, but in the case of Czechoslovakia, its history is anything but continuous. It is highly discontinuous, with the result that the country’s citizens have to constantly adjust to new circumstances and regimes that try to undo each previous one. When I am asked where I am from, my answer could vary. In modern history, my birthplace of Bohemia has been a territory in eight consecutive states: (1) the Republic of Czechoslovakia (1918–1938); (2) the Republic of Czechoslovakia (without Ruthenia, May 1945–February 1948); (3) the Protectorate of Bohemia and Moravia, (1939–1945); (4) the Republic of Czechoslovakia (1945–1948); (5) the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic (1948–1960); (6) the Czech-Slovak Federative Republic (1960–1989); (7) the Czech Republic of Czechoslovakia (1989–1992), and (8) the Czech Republic (January 1, 1993 to present). Nazism impacted all these regimes. Had it not been for Nazi Germany, Czechoslovakia could have gradually developed into a model multi-national democracy with respect for all minorities, a high standard of living for all, and with a civil society that already had an excellent start. This process may have required many years; President Tomáš Masaryk thought the country needed fifty years to accomplish such a goal.

Each academic discipline has its own way of categorizing people and events. Bryant, for example, created categories of people that lumped them into Czechs, Slovaks, Reich Germans, Sudeten Germans, Protectorate Germans, “mishlings” (Jews with mixed marriages), and “amphibians” (non-Germans married to any of the above category of Germans) who could be either Czechs or German. Even the Nazis had difficulties dealing with “mixed” people because their ideology called for a pure race as the basis of the Reich society. The problem with establishing racial categories is that a category is intended to define what things are and what they are not, and categorizing people allows for generalizations to be made regarding their placement.

Similarly, Bryant has defined various periods of time that he calls “phases” or “turning points,” such as the Anschluss of Austria, the split of the Sudetenland from Czechoslovakia, the occupation of the rest of the country, the treaty Hitler signed with the U.S.S.R., the war against Poland, Russian annexation of Eastern Poland, the occupation of Denmark and Norway, the war on the Western front, including the fall of France, the war in North Africa, occupation of Yugoslavia and Greece by Italians, and finally the Drang nach Osten, the war against the U.S.S.R. While Bryant’s turning points are used to establish “phases” (as if these started and ended at precise times), people residing in Europe (and specifically in Czechoslovakia) lived their lives from day to day, not from phase to phase, making adjustments as required, concentrating on survival, with most often covering their “backs” in case another regime’s whim became a new rule.

I have a problem with scholars, TV commentators, and common people who try to be objective critical thinkers by juxtaposing one point of view with another one. I call doing so the “on the one hand/and on the other hand” syndrome, something that implies that only two possible points of view are possible, that both have roughly equal value, and that the viewpoints are in fact the opposites of each other. For example, we might hear that the Czechs suffered greatly under Nazi rule, but that, on the other hand, Germans were also its victims. One can see immediately the asynchrony of such objectivity, especially when dealing with centuries of interactions between Czechs and Germany. Any one event or situation must be placed in the larger context.
